

Master of Professional Education (MPEd) | Two Years

Field of Educational Leadership focused in Aboriginal Education

This course-based MPEd prepares students for a range of leadership roles in schools, education systems, colleges, adult learning settings and related agencies.

In addition to a thorough grounding in the theories and practices of leadership, graduates of the program have a comprehensive understanding of Indigenous knowledge and pedagogy and the historical and contemporary conditions of Indigenous education in Canada. A specific emphasis on organizational and pedagogical strategies to improve Indigenous student success is included as part of a broader consideration of the social, political and economic context of education.

Field of Educational Leadership focused in Aboriginal Education

This two-year program is designed for professionals who wish to:

- understand how leadership and Indigenous perspectives can improve educational outcomes
- integrate Indigenous knowledge, theory, research, and leadership to address problems within politics, policy, and practice
- advance in a variety of leadership roles in school systems, colleges and other adult learning settings

► Study contemporary and historical issues in Indigenous education and identify strategies for Indigenous success

Develop an open-minded approach to analyzing and responding to challenges in education using both evidence-based research and Indigenous ways of leading, knowing, teaching and learning.

► The cohort model allows learners to individualize their learning experience

Build solid connections and support systems with your peers as you complete your degree, and work with instructors to inform course assignments and projects to suit your own interests.

► Take an active role in the timetabling of your MPEd courses

Consult with your classmates and work with program leaders to discuss proposed course progressions that suit your needs. Final arrangements can be determined in consultation with your peers registered in the program.
